Sudan's interim President, Omar al-Bashir, has been in office since February 29, a period which has seen a popular uprising against his rule. On Tuesday, Bashir declared the rebellion as an "armed coup" and ordered a crackdown. Sudan's main opposition coalition led by the Muslim Brotherhood, the country's largest opposition group, announced it was suspending dialogue with the government. The group's leader, Mohammed Nour, said that the protesters are the victims of murder. "We did not come to power in a coup. We came to remove the government of Omar al-Bashir and we have three main objectives -- it is the first objective to arrest all those who committed crimes against the people. Secondly, we have to hand over power to a sovereign civilian government that we will lead and the third is to remove the regime of this government that imposes the state of emergency and violence on the people," Nour told the Washington Post. Bashir, also the former leader of the ruling National Congress Party, has declared a nationwide state of emergency since the start of the protests. A state of emergency allows the b7e8fd5c8
